

MARINES WIN HOT BATTLE

TO ASK PEOPLE TO PAY EIGHT BILLIONS TAX

Nation's 1919 War Bill 24 Billions, McAdoo Says.

(By a Staff Correspondent.)

Washington, D. C., June 6.—(Special.)—Secretary of the Treasury McAdoo, in a letter to Representative Clegg, chairman of the ways and means committee, made public today, says that the government will actually balance during the fiscal year ending Sept. 30, 1919, $2,100,000,000 if the present rate of increase in expenditures should continue for six months. Eight billion dollars of this, he says, should be raised by taxation.

Suggestions for New Bill.

In view of this vast expenditure to which all indications point, the secretary suggests the following provisions in the new revenue bill:

1. That one-third of the cash expenditure to be made during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1919, be provided by taxation.
2. That a real war profit tax at a rate levied upon all war profits be imposed upon the balance of the cash expenditure to be made during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1919, to be levied upon all war profits in such a manner that the taxpayer should be required to pay whichever tax is the most onerous.
3. That there should be an increase in the tax on income from the sale of stocks and bonds above a certain amount.
4. That the tax on the sale of stocks and bonds should be increased from 4 per cent to 6 per cent.
5. That the tax on the sale of stocks and bonds should be increased from 4 per cent to 6 per cent.

U-BOATS HOW NEAR; GET SIXTY MILES

Torpedo Steamer

(By a Staff Correspondent.)

Washington, D. C., June 6.—(Special.)—German submarines operating in American waters, according to a report from the navy department today, were within sixty miles of the Virginia capes, quickly and the crew to launch boats.

The location of the exploit in American waters, sixty miles farther out to sea where the Norwegian steamer was reported sunk, was destroyed by German submarines in American waters. The other ship, which was torpedoed was the Winnetka.

The Harpathian was torpedoed and not sunk by gunfire, as have all other vessels, except one which have been destroyed by the German submarines in American waters. The other ship, which was torpedoed was the Winnetka.

To naval experts this is an indication that the submarines are no longer taking any chances and that they are now driven by the naval patrol to attack without warning and to submerge immediately.

Capt. Owen and all of the crew of the Harpathian were rescued by the steamer Palmer and the Cape Henry late in the day.

FROM THE VETERAN

(By John T. Mcintosh.)

WHAT HE WILL DELIVER.

WHAT HE WILL DELIVER.

TWO U-BOATS SUNK ON RAID ON LEVIATHAN

Germans Fail in an Attack on Great U. S. Transport.

Durand, Mich., June 6.—(Special.)—An eye witness account of an attack by three submarines on the United States transport Leviathan and the destruction of two of the U-boats by United States destroyers, is contained in a letter from Capt. Charles A. Harmon of this city to his son, Sgt. Carl A. Harmon, at Camp Custer. The Leviathan, formerly the German vessel, is the largest vessel afloat and was seized by the United States when this country entered the war.

Capt. Harmon is in the motor mechanics division of the aviation corps, now safely in France, while his son is a member of the ambulance company.

The Leviathan carried 10,000 soldiers on that particular trip and every precaution of camouflage and zigzag navigation was employed to protect it from the submarines, since the German government is said to have offered a fortune and great honors to the commander and crew of the U-boat that succeeds in sinking it.

All Obedience.

Of the gun aboard were raw recruits, says Capt. Harmon, "but emergency came the constant training told and not a man disobeyed. Twenty hours from dawn, at daybreak, we picked up a vessel in a howling gale, sweeping at us out of a misty fog. They are little long, in all engine and wicked tearing along at high speed. I saw the little devil curving around us as they came within a few hundred feet of us. We kept our feet on the deck, the ship listing 200 feet to the right, the men to ride they disappeared in their circles, they took to their hearts.

At the moment when the Germans arrived on the large bridge and believed themselves to be in possession of the same, a terrific explosion destroyed the central pier. Some Germans who had already crossed were taken on the south bank.

The American machine guns held the south bank and gave protection for the withdrawal of the troops retreating from the northern section for its destruction. Here again the courage of the Americans was beyond all praise. The colonials themselves, though accustomed to acts of bravery, were struck by the wonderful missile in the face of few the coolness and the extraordinary steadiness of their allies.

PARIS, June 6.—An official note describing the shore horse by American troops in the fighting at Veully, Jaulgonne, and Chateau Thierry says:

Only a few units are involved at present, particularly machine guns, but at the points where they have been called upon to fight they have won the admiration of the French troops with whom they fought. Their help was just what was expected from gallant soldiers, full of enthusiasm, and ardent fighters. We may hope everything will be the same.

YANKEE VALOR ALONG MARNE THRILLS ALLIES

Washington, D. C., June 6.—The part of Gen. Pershing's communique tonight which deals with the victorious fighting of the United States marine corps near Chateau Thierry reads:

In an attack northwest of Chateau Thierry this morning our troops, in conjunction with the French, advanced our lines at Torcy about a mile, capturing prisoners and inflicting severe losses in killed and wounded.

In addition to killing of American operations near Torcy and Laveville (to be found with the official statements), Gen. Pershing's early communique today includes a French official report on American participation in the fighting at Chateau Thierry. The French statement is as follows:

On May 31 the enemy threatened to flank the town on our left, and a breach was produced. The American machine gun battalion, United States army, was immediately thrown into Chateau Thierry simultaneously with a colonial infantry battalion. Immediately the Americans reinforced the entire defense, especially at the ends of the bridge. Their courage and ability as marksmen evoked the admiration of all.

Crushed by our fire, the enemy halted, and, as a result of counter attacks, eventually surrendered. American machine guns, were thrown beyond the edge of the town. Chateau Thierry remained entirely in our hands.

On the 1st of June, however, the enemy, taking advantage of the darkness, the Germans stole towards the large bridge, in which direction they penetrated through the western suburbs to the banks of the Marne. In order to mask their movements they made use of smoke bombs, which made the aim of the machine guns very difficult. At the same time the town underwent an extremely violent bombardment.

At the moment when the Germans arrived on the large bridge and believed themselves to be in possession of the same, a terrific explosion destroyed the central pier. Some Germans who had already crossed were taken on the south bank.

The American machine guns held the south bank and gave protection for the withdrawal of the troops retreating from the northern section for its destruction. Here again the courage of the Americans was beyond all praise. The colonials themselves, though accustomed to acts of bravery, were struck by the wonderful missile in the face of few the coolness and the extraordinary steadiness of their allies.

PARIS, June 6.—An official note describing the shore horse by American troops in the fighting at Veully, Jaulgonne, and Chateau Thierry says:

Only a few units are involved at present, particularly machine guns, but at the points where they have been called upon to fight they have won the admiration of the French troops with whom they fought. Their help was just what was expected from gallant soldiers, full of enthusiasm, and ardent fighters. We may hope everything will be the same.

PARIS, June 6.—An official note describing the shore horse by American troops in the fighting at Veully, Jaulgonne, and Chateau Thierry says:

Only a few units are involved at present, particularly machine guns, but at the points where they have been called upon to fight they have won the admiration of the French troops with whom they fought. Their help was just what was expected from gallant soldiers, full of enthusiasm, and ardent fighters. We may hope everything will be the same.

PARIS, June 6.—An official note describing the shore horse by American troops in the fighting at Veully, Jaulgonne, and Chateau Thierry says:

Only a few units are involved at present, particularly machine guns, but at the points where they have been called upon to fight they have won the admiration of the French troops with whom they fought. Their help was just what was expected from gallant soldiers, full of enthusiasm, and ardent fighters. We may hope everything will be the same.

GERMANS' HOMES STONED BY MOBS IN PORTO RICO

SAN JUAN, Porto Rico, June 6.—Angered by the news of the sinking of the Porto Rico liner Carolina by a German submarine, an anti-German demonstration started in Porto Rico last night. Numerous houses occupied by Germans were stoned and much feeling still exists against Germans or persons who express pro-German sentiments.

SWEEP ENEMY FROM HEIGHTS NEAR THIERRY

Sing "Yankee Doodle" as They Rip Hun Lines.

WITH THE AMERICAN ARMY IN PICARDY, June 6.—(By the Associated Press.)—American marines attacked the Germans at dawn this morning and gained three and a half kilometers (over two miles) over a four kilometer front and captured 100 prisoners in the Chateau-Thierry sector. The French attacking at the same time on the left took 160 prisoners.

The Americans now hold all the important high ground northwest of Chateau-Thierry.

New Battle Raging.

The marines again attacked at 5 o'clock this afternoon and the battle is still raging.

The fight started at 3:45 o'clock this morning and the Americans had attained all their objectives by 7:45 o'clock.

The Americans have been pressing the Germans so hard that the enemy has been forced to throw three new divisions of his best troops in the line during the last three days.

Fight Like Tigers.

The Americans are like tigers. Their commanders have all they can do to hold the men back. Even the wounded are enthusiastic and eager to fight. They are proud of their wounds. A general who visited a field dressing station said he was clated by the sight.

The Americans sang and whistled "Yankee Doodle" and cheered as they went over the top. They made their way swiftly through the German dead that lay strewn in No Man's land.

Prisoners Tired of War.

In addition to prisoners, the Americans captured ten machine guns. German prisoners said they had not been fed for four days owing to the deadly fire from the French and American guns which prevented the bringing up of supplies.

These Germans were without helmets. They were tired of the war. They had been told that the British opposed them, as their commanders were afraid to let them know that it was the Americans.

The Germans were cleared out of Veully wood also by the Americans, whose guns were thundering against the enemy this evening.

Struggle Near Torcy.

The fiercest fighting was in progress at last reports near Torcy, which lies about two and

JOURNALISM AND WORLD WAR I

Education Content Packet

@NMMCKIDS
@USMCMUSEUM

18900 Jefferson Davis Highway
Triangle, VA 22172
www.usmcmuseum.com | 703-784-4464

In the years leading up to 1914, tension was building in Europe over boundaries and land ownership, as the European governments fought for power, wealth, and natural resources through imperialism. The ensuing disputes over land led many countries in Europe to make mutual defense agreements, or alliances. These alliances would eventually pull Europe into the Great War, or World War I (WWI). The built up pressure turned to aggression when the Archduke Franz Ferdinand of Austria, heir to the throne of Austria-Hungary, was assassinated in Serbia. Austria-Hungary declared war on Serbia, which caused Russia to fight in order to defend Serbia. Germany saw Russia mobilizing for war, and declared war on Russia. Due to their alliance, France was drawn into the war against Germany and Austria-Hungary. When Germany attacked France by going through neutral Belgium, Britain was also pulled into the war against Germany.

American Neutrality

The United States of America was isolated from the war in Europe, and President Woodrow Wilson remained neutral in the conflict. Many Americans agreed with the President, that the United States should not engage in a "European War." The diversity of the population of the United States also swayed public opinion towards isolationism, as there wasn't a clear side to support. The majority of American citizens had been born in Europe or was of European descent, making them sympathize with their home countries. Many sided with Britain, sharing the same heritage, the language, and political ideals. However, millions of German immigrants supported the Central Powers, and Irish-Americans also supported the Central powers, due to long standing hatred towards British rule.

While physically isolated, and officially neutral, the United States government would continue its trade relations with the Allied nations (Great Britain and France). American production allowed the Allies to fight against the Central powers by supplying the weapons, munitions, and supplies needed for war, and American banks boomed as they continued to lend money to Britain.

With a heavy dependence upon the United States for supplies, Britain needed to influence American popular opinion to side with the Allies in hopes it would eventually enter the war.

Allied Powers

1. Britain
2. Belgium
3. France
6. Russia
7. Serbia

Central Powers

4. Germany
5. Austria-Hungary
8. Bulgaria
9. Ottoman Empire

Getting the News

During this period, the average American relied on newspapers to receive the fastest and most reliable news about the war in Europe. Since this was a time before computers, television, and home radios, Americans received information by word-of-mouth, letters from loved ones, newsreels, and newspapers. Word-of-mouth was often incorrect and exaggerated, and newsreels were not a reliable source of factual news, as they often focused upon entertainment rather than news. Therefore newspapers became the most reliable source of news the American people received. Many newspapers had two editions a day, allowing the newspaper to continue to update stories as they unfolded. However, newspapers were a for-profit business, and would write stories and have eye-catching headlines to capture the interest of the reader, and keep them buying more papers. This kind of reporting was not new however, examples of this kind of yellow journalism spread rampantly across the United States in 1898 after the explosion of the USS Maine in Havana, Cuba.

Early in the war, in 1914, Great Britain destroyed German Atlantic telegraph communication lines to the United States. This left only the British telegraph line. Cutting the German telegraph line effectively blocked German news from being transmitted to the United States, and any news about the war in Europe had to first pass through Britain, and their censors. Soon, news from Europe was heavily biased towards the Allies, painting a negative picture of the Germans and Central powers. Eventually, American opinion began to see Germany as the "bully of Europe" due to their invasion of Belgium. However, other nations, including Germany, saw Wilson's continued trade with Britain as a violation of America's claim of neutrality.

In 1915, Germany began unrestricted submarine warfare around Great Britain, and warned the United States with newspapers advertisements it would sink any vessel, warship or civilian, sailing to Great Britain. Not believing the warnings from Germany, the United States continued its trade with the Allied nations. In result, on 7 May 1915, a German submarine torpedoed and sunk the RMS Lusitania, an ocean liner traveling from New York to Liverpool, England, killing 1,198 people, including 128 Americans.

While the German government could argue the validity of their actions, their story was not headline news. Most Americans read about the unprovoked loss of life, further swaying their allegiance to the Allies. Further still, in March 1917, American newspapers would publish the breaking story of the the Zimmerman telegram: a secret communication between Germany and Mexico, solidifying the majority of American opinion towards war with Germany. Woodrow Wilson would ask Congress to declare war in April 1917.

When America entered the war in April 1917, President Wilson wanted full support of the American people. To ensure that the American public's opinion continued to support the Allies, the federal government asked the news media to voluntarily restrict and censor what they reported. This included not publishing information about: American merchant shipping to and from Europe, harbor defenses, any information (rumor or true) about international policies

Committee on Public Information

The Committee on Public Information was created to create positive publicity to convince the American people to support U.S. involvement in WWI. The chair of the Committee, George Creel believed that they were not spreading malicious propaganda, but true information, based on fact. However, that did not mean the committee wanted the full truth to be published. When the committee was created, the list of restricted topics for the news was lengthened, and Creel believed it was the patriotic duty of the news media to follow these restrictions.

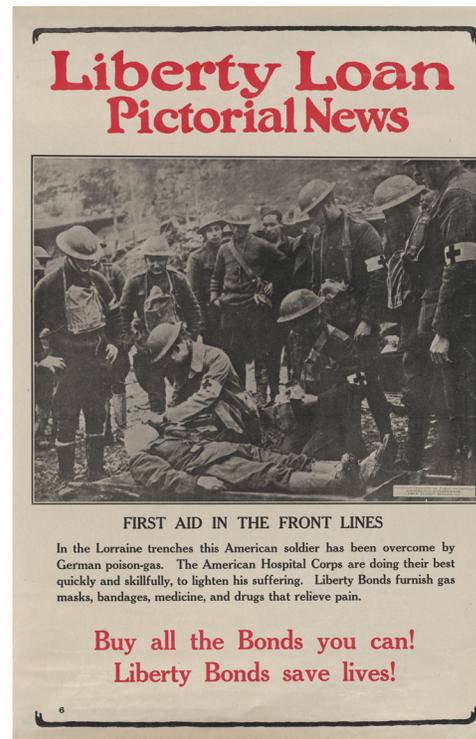

The committee used various media outlets to spread information about the war: newspapers, posters, speeches, radio, and movies. Topics included the draft, rationing, war bonds, victory gardens, and the reasons behind why America was fighting. The committee was so successful in monitoring and releasing information, that any American could read the same news about the war anywhere in the country.

In addition to the news, the American people were also subject to censoring what they said about the war. In 1917, President Wilson asked that the Espionage Act be passed to prevent the American people from interfering with military operations or the recruitment of new military members through speeches, gatherings, articles, etc. It also made it a crime to support the enemies of the United States during war.

American Journalists in Europe

At the start of the war in 1914, American journalists were not allowed to accompany British troops to the front lines. However, even when the Americans entered the war in 1917, only 80 American war correspondents were allowed access to the front, and all of their reports, articles, and photos were subject to review by military censors. Unlike journalists in the United States, these war correspondents who traveled to France to report on the war were subject to involuntary censorship. These censors made sure that no article or photo was deemed harmful to the American war effort, showed disrespect to the federal government, American flag, or American Soldier's uniforms. Both civilian journalists in France working for newspapers the government was working on, the number of troops in the American Expeditionary Forces (Army, Navy, and Marines), the location of bases abroad, or the location or future of American forces. While these restrictions were voluntary, approximately 99% of the press observed these censorship regulations.

CPI Pamphlet, 1917 (Metropolitan Museum of Art)

in America, and military journalists working for The Stars and Stripes, a newspaper for servicemen, were subject to these regulations.

One of the most important restrictions was that a correspondent was not allowed to give the name or location of any unit. This was to ensure that the Germans could not use the information to their advantage. Further, German intelligence knew that some American divisions were experienced, while others did not have experience at the front. If the Germans could learn which division was where, they could avoid the more experienced troops to focus on the new recruits. For the American people, censoring this information meant that any news from the front they were reading back home was a generalized version of events. They were not aware of who, the Army or Marines, was fighting, and exactly where in France they were.

Floyd Gibbons and the Marines at Belleau Wood

Floyd Gibbons was a war correspondent for the Chicago Tribune. He had a very charismatic personality, and was one of radio's first news reporters. Due to his experience covering international news like the Pancho Villa expedition in 1916, and the sinking of the British vessel RMS Laconia, by a German torpedo in February 1917, the Chicago Tribune sent him to France to cover the war.

On 6 June 1918, he and Lt. Oscar Hartzel of the Intelligence Division entered Belleau Wood. Belleau Wood was made up of patches of forest with wheat fields in between. The Germans, pushing towards Paris were waiting with artillery and machine guns among the trees. When he arrived, Gibbons sent a dispatch to the news censor's office: "I am up at the front and entering Belleau Wood with the U.S. Marines."

When the Marines began to march through the wheat field, Gibbons ignored the suggestion to stay back, rather, he joined the advance. Since war correspondents could not carry weapons, Gibbons could only march ahead. During the march forward, he was struck by a bullet in his left arm, and left shoulder blade. Eventually he was struck in the left eye, and had to lay in the field for three hours until dark, when he was taken to a field hospital. He would survive, but would eventually lose his left eye. The Battle for Belleau Wood would rage for three more weeks, and the Marines would emerge triumphant however, at a cost. In a single day of fighting at Belleau Wood on 6 June 1918, more Marines were killed in this battle than any previous battle in the Marine Corps' history.

Before the dispatch driver could reach the censor's office, the news of Gibbons' injury had reached the censors. Believing that Gibbons would die from his injury, the censor allowed his dispatch through without deleting "Marines." For three days during the battle, the censors allowed information about the Marines to be reported, uncensored. After the third day, the restrictions were once again enforced.

When Floyd Gibbons' dispatch went through without censoring out "Marines," and the subsequent articles that came out during the early part of the battle, the American people had, for the first time, something to truly rally around. All throughout the country American newspapers were hailing the courage and dedication of the United States Marines making it appear as though the Marines were the only American troops to fight in the actions at Belleau Wood. The American public was hungry to hear more news about the “Marines” in the trenches, and the Marine Corps reputation for a fierce fighting force was born.

While the 6,000 Marines did show incredible fortitude, the 250,000 American Soldiers and French Infantry would do most of the fighting in the spring and summer of 1918. However, because the censorship of the newspapers was reinstated, their stories would not be told after the conclusion of the war in 1919.

To this day, Belleau Wood remains a sacred place for Marines, many of whom travel to France to visit the spot where the U.S. Marines marched straight into artillery and machine gun fire, and created the determined and courageous ethos of a Marine.

For more information, visit us online at www.usmcmuseum.com.

Belleau Wood has become a symbol of Marine courage and tenacity.

Robert B. Neller, General, U.S. Marine Corps
37th Commandant of the Marine Corps